5. To drink fine wines on a castaway island

The tiny island of Petit St Vincent in St Vincent & The Grenadines is a place to get cast away in style. There's just 22 luxury cottages and two-bedroom beachfront villas that come without TV, phone or Wi-Fi – but you do get a Balinese spa, a Jean-Michel Cousteau dive centre and – on selected weeks from late November to mid-April – the unexpected chance to learn about and sample fine wines from Tuscany, California or Washington State, or alternatively craft beers from Grenada. The vintners that visit the island to do this usually stay for a week and give two complimentary 90 minute talks with guests trying around eight drinks each time before heading to dinner. Now that's a very civilised way to do a wine tasting.
